PRINCIPAL'S MESSAGE

Congratulations, Seniors, upon your choice of STUDENT ACTIVITIES as the theme of your yearbook. When earlier Americans graduated from the "little red schoolhouses" there was no scientific measure to test what per cent of their education came from reading, 'riting, and 'rithmetic, and how much resulted from their less-formal activities. As you graduate from a somewhat larger red school-house there is still no proof of the exact source of any skill or ability you possess. But, educators have become increasingly aware of the potential for enrichment in purposefully planned and effectively executed student activities. Your choice of this yearbook theme suggests that students, too, are cognizant of the proper values inherent in student activities.

In the symbolic "little red schoolhouse," it seems likely that where the same needs existed (such as school safety, student government, recreation, socialization, and development of individual interests and talents) they were fulfilled. The same types of students must have responded then as now—the mature students, the leaders, the loyal, the energetic, the considerate, the ingenious, and the responsible. While participating in these "extra" activities, priceless internal qualities were developed such as ability to recognize and attack a problem, ability to work so that others could work with them, and ability to initiate and continue suitable service without constant directing by others. Through the years teachers have been so impressed by the EDUCATING accomplished in these out-of-class activities that we are less sure which are curricular, and which, if any, are extracurricular student activities. Our concern is that our school shall incorporate the amount and type of student activities which shall best benefit you, our cherished students.

Student Life . . .

Anybody have a map?

Do you girls have a hall pass?

Burning the midnight oil.

Not another term paper!

We're getting our extra "en-ger-ny."

Out late last night, Ritchie?

You can come out now.
The test is over.

Take our "Lo-Cal" pills, and eat what you like.

The pause that refreshes.

This could go on forever.

Let's have a little order here.

It's about time!

Who, me? Why, I've worn heels for years.

Stop the music!

May I borrow a dime?

I wish someone would buy a ticket.
